Planting Roots

experience at all decorating or being a homeowner," Kloss says. "I knew I wanted to make it mine, but I wasn't quite sure how to go about doing that." Enter Nate Berkus, whom Kloss knew of from his appearances on Oprah and had then met through a mutual friend. "I've been in the business a really long time," Berkus says, "and to work with someone who gets so excited over the delivery of a mirror is really nice." The two set about creating a home that reflects both Kloss's personal style and her age. With iron hooks from Anthropologie, a waterfall-style console from interior-design resource Made Goods, and the mirror Berkus is referring to (a custom brass-shark tooth piece from Chicago-based Antiques on Old Plank Road), her rooms are luxurious without being overly cluttered with inappropriately expensive rarities. "I wanted to mix and match the same way I do with fashion—wearing, say, a beautiful Saint Laurent tailored blazer with an H&M T-shirt," says Kloss, who paired high-end feather wallpaper from Lee Jofa with drapes from Restoration Hardware. Since, at the moment, she's wearing a cozy Theyskens' Theory sweater and skinny jeans, it's clear that comfort and a sense of warmth are priorities, too—hence the mostly neutral tones and tactile properties of everything from an ivory sheepskin bench in her living room to the grass-cloth wallpaper in the kitchen nook.

Kloss and Berkus also purposely left room to grow in the multilevel house. Though the guest bedroom upstairs is currently the "shove-everything-in-there-and-close-the-door room," as Kloss calls it, at some point she'll likely convert it to an office for her many side projects—including (at the moment) her jeans collaboration with Frame Denim and her philanthropic, nutrition-focused vegan baking business, Karlie's Kookies. Downstairs in her "football-watching room" (she roots for her home team, the St. Louis Rams), there's just a big comfy couch from Restoration Hardware and a black-and-white print VIEW>464
